My Trip To A New York Airport When I Was Living In England... Last Night

BY MICHAEL ARMJO

Last night, during the day, I was driving to the airport to pick up my buddy Mike Mendez. I was driving my current car, and was concerned about how his luggage would fit into the tiny back seat. As I gazed upon the back seat I was convinced it would fit.

When I got to the airport, I was in New York and suddenly I was part of a group of young, excited students who had English accents and were amazed at being in such a place. Where we came from, there wasn't a place like this. So we frolicked through the airport like kids in a candy store. We were amazed, surprised, and excited to be with such a hodgepodge of people.

One of the other students made gifts and placed phone numbers in a box. He skipped his way through and handed out the gifts: mostly chocolate bars and CDs of classic rock. He gave me a phone number and said "You'll want this number, it's hers," and he pointed to one of the other students. I looked at her and she was only about 19 years old, and I thought: "That's disgusting; she's too young for me." Then I gazed into a nearby mirror and saw something shocking: I wasn't a middle aged man, nor did I look the same. I was a young 20 year old, my ethnicity was now different, but I had the wisdom and memories of my current self.

I was completely confused on what was transpiring.

I went to a turnstile and saw a young man who resembled, exactly, my childhood friend Todd Mestas. I was right next to him and stared in amazement. He was smiling and looked so happy.

What's interesting was that when I woke from this vivid and realistic dream, I didn't know where I was, nor did I know what to do with the memory of that dream. I can visualize, hear, and smell the airport and I could still taste the chocolate bars. It was so realistic I believed I was really there.

The stranger part was the friend, Mike, who I was supposed to pick up from the airport, had passed away a few years back. So had Todd. He died the following year. They are both gone. So what does that mean? Or what does that mean to me? I drew some conclusions:

1. When I pass, am I coming back as a new person, reincarnated into someone different who deep inside I've been yearning to be?

2. Should I leave California, as I've been wanting to do these past 2 years, and begin a new life?

3. 2 Corinthians 5:17 says: "Therefore, if anyone is in Christ, the new creation has come: The old has gone, the new is here!" Was God telling me that I am now a new man?

I've had many dreams, but don't remember most of them. This one stuck in my head and I can remember so many details. I thought about my life and realized I eat fairly healthy, I don't take any drugs, I don't drink, I just had a CT scan and I have no tumors, nor is my heart in danger. So why has this message that came to me, while asleep, embedded itself into my mind, and now into my spirit?

I'm not sure why this dream disrupted my life, felt so real, and won't leave my mind. But what I do know is that the way I felt during this episode in my life made me feel better than I've felt in a very long time. Made me feel different. Gave me some type of hope. I guess God knew that a trip to a New York airport when I was living in England would give me what I needed, which it did...last night.

First Academy Awards Telecast

COURTESY OF HISTORY.COM

Thursday, March 19, 1953, proved to be a historic date, because for the first time, audiences were able to sit in their living rooms and watch as the movie world's most prestigious honors, the Academy Awards, are given out at the RKO Pantages Theatre in Hollywood, California.

Organized in May 1927, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences was envisioned as a non-profit organization dedicated to the advancement of the film industry. The first Academy Awards were handed out in May 1929, in a ceremony and banquet held in the Blossom Room of the Hollywood Roosevelt Hotel. The level of suspense was nonexistent, however, as the winners had already been announced several months earlier. For the next 10 years, the Academy gave the names of the winners to the newspapers for publication at 11 p.m. on the night of the awards ceremony; this changed after one paper broke the tacit agreement and published the results in the evening edition, available before the ceremony began. A sealed envelope system began the next year, and endures to this day, making Oscar night Hollywood's most anticipated event of the year.

Public interest in the Oscars was high from the beginning, and from the second year on the ceremony was covered in a live radio broadcast. The year 1953 marked the first time that the Academy Awards were broadcast on the fledgling medium of television. The National Broadcasting Company (NBC) TV network carried the 25th annual awards ceremony live from Hollywood's RKO Pantages Theatre. Bob Hope was the master of ceremonies, while Fredric March, a two-time Academy Award winner for Best Actor (for 1932's Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde and 1946's The Best Years of Our Lives), presented the awards. The statuette for Best Picture went to Cecil B. DeMille's The Greatest Show on Earth, while John Ford won Best Director for The Quiet Man. Winners in the top two acting categories were Gary Cooper (High Noon) and Shirley Booth (Come Back, Little Sheba).

Hope, a star of stage and screen who tirelessly performed in United Service Organization (USO) shows for American troops during World War II, would become a mainstay of the new TV medium. He was also the most venerated Academy Awards host, playing MC no fewer than 18 times between 1939 and 1977. NBC broadcast the Oscars until 1961, when the American Broadcasting Company (ABC) took over for the next decade, including the first awards broadcast in color in 1966. Although NBC briefly regained the show in the early 1970s, ABC came out on top again in 1976 and has broadcast every Academy Awards show since. The network is under contract to continue showing the Oscars until 2014.

Did You Know?

Great Places To See Southern California In Bloom This Spring

COURTESY OF THE STATE OF CA

This spring bloom promises to be one of the best in years. After weeks of drinking in fresh rainwater, California's sunny landscapes are beginning to burst with colorful wildflowers.

Here are just six of the many places in California that will inspire you to get outdoors and smell the roses – not to mention the poppies, daffodils, tulips and more.

1. Antelope Valley California Poppy Reserve

The Antelope Valley is the ultimate place to spot the state flower, the California Poppy, in the wild. Located just 75 miles north of Los Angeles, this state-protected reserve boasts a carpet of bright orange blooms each spring, as well as owl's clover, lupine, goldfields, cream cups and coreopsis. Visitors can typically enjoy the visual bounty from mid-February through late May along eight miles of trails overlooking rolling hills. Trail benches make great vantage points to spot other wildlife, such as singing meadowlarks, lizards zipping across the trail, gophers and maybe even a coyote.

2. Anza-Borrego Desert State Park

Some of Mother Nature's most spectacular floral shows in the West take place each spring at the Anza-Borrego Desert State Park – California's largest state park, encompassing over 600,000 acres in San Diego's East County. Following winter rains, the dry and rugged landscape is magically transformed into a kaleidoscope of wildflowers, from tiny bursts of color no larger than the head of a pin to towering ocotillos with fiery spines of scarlet blossoms. The displays promise to be especially vibrant sometime during March and April after Southern California's recent winter rains. Visitors will also enjoy seeing the multitude of butterflies that are drawn to this spectacular floral pageant.

Guests can call the Park's 24-hour "Wildflower Hotline" for updates.

3. Channel Islands National Park

This isolated national park off the coast of Ventura and Santa Barbara counties is known as the "Galapagos Islands of North America," featuring unique animals, plants and archeological resources found nowhere else on Earth. The islands are home to an astonishing 775 species of plants, many of which blanket the fields with colors each spring. To help visitors make sense of the abundant blooms, the park publishes flower guide each year. One of the most popular, the brilliant yellow coreopsis flowers, usually peak between late January through March and are best seen on Santa Barbara, Anacapa and San Miguel Islands. Sometimes the colors are so vivid they can be seen from the shore! San Miguel also boasts lupine and poppies, while Anacapa features vibrant red paintbrush and island morning glory. Santa Barbara Island, home to a colony of elephant seals, also blossoms with lavender chicky and pale yellow cream cups. While taking in Mother Nature's rainbow of flowers in the spring, park visitors can also enjoy spotting western gulls and other seabirds begin nesting on the islands, as well as newborn California sea lions and northern fur seals.

Anza Borrego State Park

4. Death Valley National Park

If you're visiting Southern California soon, don't miss a rare and epic "super bloom" of abundant wildflowers at Death Valley National Park. Only under perfect conditions do wildflowers paint the desert with hues of gold, purple, pink and white. Thanks to heavy rains this fall and early winter, the park's stark and arid landscapes are giving birth to Desert Gold, Golden Evening Primrose, Gravel Ghost, Bigelow Monkeyflower and Desert Five-

Spot along the lower elevations and foothills, and are likely to hang around until late March or early April.

5. Figueroa Mountain Recreation Area

Nothing says "spring" like a field of wild sunflowers, and one of the best places to enjoy them and other fantastic flower displays is Figueroa Mountain in Santa Barbara County. Late March brings forth early blooming specimens such as purple shooting stars. Later arrivals on the mountain include chocolate lilies and the scarlet Indian paintbrush. The open grassland areas support a profusion of species, including goldfields, sky lupine, California poppies and more.

6. Laguna Coast Wilderness Park

After the winter rains, flowers spring up in this beautiful coastal park in Orange County. The park features 40 miles of trails that wind through oak and sycamore woodlands and lead hikers up and down hills and canyons – some of which offer great views of the Pacific Ocean. At each elevation, visitors have the opportunity to view different varieties of native plants and flowers such as wild hyacinth, morning glories, popcorn flowers and southern sun cups. Coastal sage scrub provides a year-round home for the endangered California gnatcatcher.

Who Wants Bundt Cake?

By GEL DELOS SANTOS, CHINO VALLEY CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Chino Hills - Esther and Charles Cuellar are the new owners of a franchise called Nothing Bundt Cakes. They currently have one location in West Covina, and they will be opening a second location, in Chino Hills, on April 8, 2016. Esther is an experienced franchiser who has worked in restaurants for 25 years, and she has always been passionate about having a business that has to do with food. She currently owns two other franchises: Yogurtland and Jersey Mike's. There is something about the culture behind the franchise business that she really likes and enjoys.

She is very excited about her new franchise. When asked why she chose cakes, she said "Cakes are so easy for people to get hooked on!" She chose to open a Chino Hills location so that she can be rooted in the Chino Valley, creating relationships that will keep her business open and help her be part of the community for a long time. Furthermore, giving back to the community is very important to her, so she is partnering with the Let It Be Foundation, which helps families care for their sick children. When the restaurant opens on April 8, it will be a Benefit Day, which means that 20% of all sales that day will be donated to the Let It Be Foundation.

Come and join the Chino Valley Chamber of Commerce for Nothing Bundt Cakes' ribbon cutting on Friday, April 8, 2016, from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. This will be followed by a Grand Opening the next day, Saturday, April 9, when the first 50 customers purchasing a Bundt cake will receive a card for a free Bundtlet every month for a whole year. Nothing Bundt Cakes will be open every day: Monday-Friday from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m., and Saturday and Sunday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Chino Valley Chamber of Commerce proudly welcomes Nothing Bundt Cakes to the Chino Valley community.

Detectives are currently working with the San Bernardino County District Attorney's Office to ensure that all of the felony warrants in the system are approved for nationwide extradition. At this time, over 40 warrants have been approved for nationwide extradition, and additional approvals are pending.

Chino Man Fires At Officers And Sets Home on Fire

STAFF REPORTS

Chino - A man who was about to be evicted from a rental property in Chino barricaded himself in his home after shooting at police officers and was later found dead.

Around 8:20 a.m. March 9, Chino Police officers approached the home in the 11400 block of Santa Anita with the landlord in order to serve an eviction notice, when the man inside the home began shooting at the officers.

"Upon our officers arrival ... an unknown subject came to the front of the location and fired upon the officers," Police Captain Wes Simmons said. "The officers did return fire, and they did deploy chemical agents on the house."

Neighborhood residents were evacuated for several hours. The house became fully engulfed in flames after officers deployed non-incendiary chemical agents into the home. Officers do not believe that the chemicals started the fire.

How To Knock Out Sugar For National Nutrition Month

BY BRITTANY THOMAS

Type "sugar" and "culprit" into your favorite search engine and you'll find no shortage of health reasons to knock sugar out of your diet.

For example, three authors argue in the British Journal of Sports Medicine that, despite ample exercise, too much sugar consumption can still leave you fat. That's in addition to new studies published earlier this year that indicate too much sugar triggers brain defects, liver disease and breast cancer.

"The toxicity of excessive sugar consumption is well-documented, yet it's so prevalent in our packaged foods that we may be digesting it without knowing it," says nutritionist and juicing pioneer Cherie Calbom, who is known as "The Juice Lady."

But with vigilance you can ditch the sugar in your diet, says Calbom, who tackles the subject in her newest book, "The Juice Lady's Sugar Knockout," and she offers her Sugar Addiction Quiz at www.juiceladycherie.com/Juice/the-sugar-knockout. She says March, which is National Nutrition Month, is the perfect time to start. A few ways to begin include:

- Pick the right day to start. A birthday or celebration dinner is not the best time to commit to a new diet. You'll eventually develop the willpower to navigate through special events, but it's not a good idea to start with an unusual challenge.
- Make emergency snack packs. Whether shopping, traveling or at work, you don't want to be caught hungry without a healthy option. Plummeting blood-sugar levels will make it that much harder to resist sugar-laden treats. Nuts and seeds, veggie sticks, turkey jerky and apples are among the healthy options.
- Take time to de-stress. Stress causes spikes in cortisol, a hormone that makes you irra-tionally hungry, leaving you susceptible to sugar-laden snacks. When stressed, take a long, deep breath in for five seconds, hold, and then let it out to a count of five. Deep breathing is said to activate your vagus nerve, which properly regulates metabolism.

"There is much more you can do to break sugar addiction," Calbom says. "It's very doable, but you must commit to it!"

About Cherie Calbom, MSN (a.k.a. The Juice Lady) Cherie Calbom holds a Master of Science degree in whole foods nutrition from Bastyr University. Known as "The Juice Lady" (www.juiceladycherie.com) for her work with juicing and health, she is author of 31 books, with millions of copies sold worldwide. No stranger to healthy diet trends, Cherie joined George Foreman as nutritional spokesperson in the Knockout the Fat phenomena that forever changed grilling in America. ■

Two Tea Cups

BY PASTOR MARK HOPPER

Having a cup of tea is one of my wife's favorite things. She enjoys a warm cup of tea on a cold winter's night at home. She enjoys going out with friends to a local tea shop. She also enjoys taking our daughters and our grandchildren out to a special Tea Party. The grandkids get special sandwiches and desserts along with a variety of flavored tea, and they love having Tea Parties with Grammy at our house, too.

Enjoying a cup of tea and collecting tea cups are a big deal in our family.

Recently, one of our daughters, who lives out of the area, sent my wife a package. In the box was a beautiful tea cup and a note.

Her note explained that while she was out shopping, she saw this tea cup and thought of her mother. Our daughter knew that my wife already had plenty of tea cups, but she bought this one to let her mother know she was thinking of her.

Our daughter went on to explain that she had actually purchased two tea cups. One was for herself and one was for her mother. Even though they don't live nearby, my wife and our daughter would have matching tea cups to share.

In her note she wrote, "I got a matching tea cup for me - just like yours, so when I drink out of it, I will be praying for you and you can be praying for me."

These matching tea cups are a tangible reminder of the bond that is shared by a mother and her daughter.

You may share something similar with a friend or loved one. Some people have matching bracelets. Others have one-half of a charm or necklace, with their friend or loved one having the other half.

In the Bible, there are many examples of visual, tangible reminders that God provided to remind his people of his love. In the Christian Faith, we share a piece of bread and a small cup of juice to remind us of the Last Supper that Jesus shared with His disciples. The bread is a reminder of His body that was nailed to the Cross and the cup is a reminder of His blood that was shed at His crucifixion.

In the Jewish faith, they share several items of food including unleavened bread and cups of wine as they remember the Passover recorded in Exodus. These are tangible and visible reminders of God's love and care.

I wonder if you have something on your shelf or in your cupboard that is a helpful reminder of someone's love or concern for you? Is there someone in your family or at your place of work that would be encouraged by a thoughtful gift from you?

Two tea cups can be a timely reminder that you are thinking of others and they are thinking of you!

Becoming Who We're Intended To Be

BY NANCY STOOPS, M.A., M.F.T.

I believe we are all born with incredible potential to be our best.

I think that there is a plan for us and our lives when we are born. Within that plan for us is an interpretation of how we will be at our absolute personal best. My goal for myself has always been to keep growing and functioning at my optimum level every day. I believe that if I do this, I will grow into the person I'm intended to be. This is my way of honoring my life and my Creator.

Life isn't always an easy thing and will throw many curve balls our way. Having lost one brother to suicide, another to murder and a father to pancreatic cancer has taught me how vulnerable we all are. It has also made me feel so very blessed to still be alive and well. I don't just want to go through my life living to die; instead I have always died to live. I want to be my best so that I can experience my life fully. I live my life very passionately and want to feel all of it.

Examining the pieces of yourself that get in the way of being who you are intended to be is very hard work. It's even harder work to have the courage to let go of these dysfunctional parts of ourselves. Most of these dysfunctional pieces have been part of us for years and serve some dysfunctional purpose that we have grown to rely on. It's learning to let go of these dysfunctional pieces that will allow us to become who we are intended to be. This gut-wrenching but very worthwhile personal work can lead us into total inner peace and contentment!

My Husband Keeps Volunteering Me! - A Letter From Pamela

BY DANICE AKIYOSHI, N.D.

Q: I am a helpful, nice person, but I'm tired of my husband volunteering my time for everything. If our neighbor throws her back out, he volunteers me to make dinner for them for three days. If someone in the carpool can't make it, he volunteers me to take their place. If someone is having a refrigerator delivered, he says I would be more than happy to wait at their home for the delivery man. If his family needs anything, he volunteers me. He feels free to do this because I have my own little business. I do medical billing and I work from my computer at home. He thinks I can just pack up my work and cart it around anywhere. Because of these constant interruptions, I am often up until midnight trying to finish my work. He doesn't know this because he's in bed at 9:30. I don't mind helping people, but I'd like to do it on my own schedule, not his. How should I approach this?

A: It sounds to me like your husband doesn't take your work very seriously. I don't know enough of the story, but I wonder if he under values the financial contribution you bring to the household. Or perhaps he struggles with his own self esteem and wants to be a people pleaser. Unfortunately, this is at your expense, not his. To get to the bottom of it, why don't you ask him if he's fine with you putting your business on hold, as well as the money it brings into the household (slight sarcasm)? Explain that then you will be free to do all of these errands he keeps setting up for you. If he says the family needs the money, this gives you an opening to ask him to respect your business as if it were actually important to the family. If you'd like a more direct approach - which I always like best - advise him that he is no longer free to offer your time or services without your permission.

School Hockey Team Makes Playoffs

STAFF REPORTS

Chino Valley – The Chino Valley Flames Hockey Team, part of the Anaheim Ducks High School Hockey League, made it to the 2nd round of playoffs in their first year as a high school hockey team.

The Flames are made up of 18 high-school aged boys (and one girl) from several Chino Valley high schools: nine players from Chino Hills High School, five from Ayala, one from Don Lugo, one from Chino and three from outside of the CVUSD district.

Several well-known schools have teams that are part of the Ducks high school league, including Servite, Orange Lutheran, St John Bosco, Mater Dei and Santa Margarita.

The underdog Flames were in 11th place going into the playoffs, but won their first game with a major upset against Bishop Amat. They lost their 2nd round game in overtime against the #3 seeded Edison Chargers.

This young team had an outstanding first season playing bigger and older kids as well as teams that have been established for years.

If you are a hockey fan, know a hockey fan or support young adults becoming actively involved with a sport, you can follow the team on Twitter and Instagram (@ChinoValley-Hockey) to see what awesome things are yet to come!

Facilities Master Plan Meetings

COURTESY OF CVUSD

Chino Valley – The third round of CVUSD's Facilities Master Plan meetings is underway. Improving schools in the Chino Valley is a long-term investment for our community. Equipping our schools with the latest technology, heightening awareness of school facility safety and incorporating interactive learning environments into existing schools to maintain academic excellence were themes that resounded in group meetings hosted by Superintendent Wayne Joseph at all 35 schools during the fall months. The meetings are part of the Facilities Master Plan (FMP) update process that has been underway since early 2015.

Most of our schools were built decades ago, with some built in the 1950's, and they need basic health and safety improvements. The Facilities Master Plan will allow the district to identify long-term facility needs based on demographics, facility assessment, and the district's educational goals and then develop strategies to address these needs in a comprehensive manner. The FMP process will conclude with the production of a document that will outline facility needs into the foreseeable future for all of the district's existing schools and district support sites. The last FMP was completed in 2009.

Per current state guidelines, a school is eligible for a complete modernization when it reaches 25-years-old. The state traditionally provides a portion of the funds for the modernization, however there are two requirements that school districts must meet to obtain those funds. The district must provide their own matching funds and they must have the Division of the State Architect (DSA) approved final plans to qualify for the state funds. The process to obtain the funds is very competitive, as districts throughout the state are all hoping to tap into the funds. In fact, those funds have been totally expended over the past six years, due to the state's economic downturn, which makes competition fiercer than in previous years.

While we have been able to make repairs and upgrades to some of our schools, additional health and safety and other facility improvements are still needed. The four tenets of the Master Plan are:

- To build something that does not currently exist to address education needs;
- Renovate/Repair existing facilities;
- Complete improvements to the grounds such as play fields, black top surfaces or drop off and pick up routes;
- Improve technology and update furniture.

Plan to join the conversation and provide important input on the priorities for our schools!

Meetings have already been conducted with school principals, and then again with the school's instructional/support staff, and now it is the community's turn.

Find your school and the meeting date and time on the list below.
